Dear Mr. Doyle

I write to you as the last known legal representative of Linda Hirshman. If you no longer represent her, please advise me who does, or if I should communicate directly with her. Two years ago I corresponded and spoke with you regarding your client, Linda Hirshman, and her actions in violation of her agreement with myself and Elizabeth Weber to authorize a tv series based on the book "Sisters in Law" produced by Alyssa Milano, among others. The attached letter set forth our legal and factual position. My letter made it absolutely clear that any such agreement between Ms. Hirshman and Ms. Milano would be a violation of her agreement with us. You never replied substantively to it, thus, effectively acquiescing in the analysis provided.

In the meantime, acting in reliance on our rights under our agreement with Ms. Hirshman, we have produced two productions of the play, first in Phoenix in April 2019, and then in Los Angeles in October 2019, have secured cash investments in the project of $225,000, along with substantial contributions by the producing theaters, and have actively promoted and advanced the project not only on theatrical but other platforms as well.

Now all that work and investment has again been jeopardized by shocking news of which we have just become aware. It has come to our attention that, in the face of the clear language of our agreement with Ms. Hirshman, Ms. Milano and her producers are soliciting screenwriters at this time for a tv series based on the book.

This is notice to you and Ms. Hirshman that unless within fourteen (14) days of this email we receive satisfactory evidence that no such series has been or is authorized, and that Ms. Hirshman is fully in compliance with the terms of our agreement with her, arbitration proceedings will be commenced against Ms. Hirshman pursuant to her agreement with us to declare the Milano agreement void and invalid, for damages, attorneys' fees, and such other relief as may be appropriate. Further, we maintain that Ms. Hirshman's actions are willful and malicious given her actual notice of our rights for over two years thus warranting imposition of punitive and exemplary damages.

All rights and positions are fully reserved.

Regards

Don Franzen
